Part I. Read the passage and then choose the correct answer to each question. (1.0 point)

According to the World Wildlife Fund (WWF), forests cover approximately 31% of land area and are a source of livelihood and employment for over 13.2 million people. These expansive ecosystems also support about three-quarters of life on earth. The three types of forest habitats include temperate, tropical and boreal. Forests are teeming with life, and certain animal and plant species thrive in each type of ecosystem. For example, you are likely to see moose, wolves, and deer in boreal forests. In tropical rainforests, it’s common to see toucans, jaguars, and various insects. You can also expect to see fox, black bear, and bald eagles in more temperate forests.

Found on every continent except Antarctica, grasslands may be called pampas, savannahs, rangelands, prairies, or steppes and are categorized as tropical or temperate. Regardless of their name, grassy vegetation is the dominant flora found there. Rainfall usually varies from season to season; however, grasslands typically see between 20 to 35 inches of rain annually, which isn’t enough precipitation for promoting tree growth. Grasslands are rich in biodiversity and support numerous grazing animals. For example, in African savannahs, you’ll find zebras, giraffes, and wildebeest. Prairie dogs, bison, and coyotes are common in North American grasslands.

Located between 15° and 35° latitude in North America, South America, Africa, the Middle East, and Asia, deserts only receive about 10 inches of rainfall per year. Desert temperatures can fluctuate from over 100°F during the daytime to about 25°F at night. Under these conditions, you may be surprised to learn that many flora and fauna thrive here..
